

Robert McCoy biography

I qualified at the British School of Osteopathy in 1988 with a diploma in osteopathy (DO) and started in practice working for Walter McKone in Alexandra Palace. Later I moved to Derbyshire and finally ended up in Edenbridge in Kent, where I have worked for the past 16 years.

During this time I updated my DO at the British College of Osteopathic Medicine, (then the British College of Naturopathy and Osteopathy) gaining a BSc(Hons) and MSc in Osteopathic Medicine.

I started working at the British School of Osteopathy in 1999, tutoring in the general clinic and the older person's clinic, and lecturing in anatomy.

Also, over the past 13 years I have been a clinical competence assessment examiner at many of the osteopathic education institutions, and so have had the pleasure of meeting many of the profession over the years in one capacity or another.
